A Wilson Heater

Will Save 40 Per Cent.
Of Your Fuel Bill

The celebrated Hot-Blast Down-Draft creates perfect combustion, the gases and fumes (40 per cent. of the heating power of wood), ordinarily escaping unburned up the chimney in other stoves, are all consumed and turned into heat in the WILSON. The Wilson is the only heater in the world, which actually burns all of the fuel put into it. The WILSON is air-tight, heat can be regulated to any degree, and will hold a fire for 36 hours. What you save on fuel will pay for a WILSON HEATER in one season. Burns Wood

Altoona, Pa., Dec. 17.—Three railroad fatalities occurred in Altoona and vicinity, while driving to Altoona with a load of country marketing. Stephen Feathers, of Clayburg, was killed by being struck by a locomotive at a crossing four miles south of the city. Feathers is said to have been asleep when the horses drew the wagon in front of the approaching engine. The horses escaped injury.

Later Andy Linchok, a Polish track hand, was hit by an engine near Gallitzin and died in the Altoona hospital.

Bridgeport, Conn., Dec. 16.—While dragging a pond near Redding bridge in a search for small fish for bait, Ruben Warren saw a trout weighing about a pound, swimming in a pool near the shore. He waded out toward the fish, which did not move. Bending over quickly, he grabbed it close up toward the gills, and on raising it from the water he was astounded to find a water snake, measuring four feet, fast to the trout's tail. Warren took the fish and snake ashore, killed the reptile and brought them to this city, where he has placed them on exhibition.

CENTRAL BANK HIS REMEDY
Comptroller Ridgely's Plan to Check Panics.

Washington, Dec. 17.—The report of the comptroller of the currency for the year ended October 31, 1907, which was sent to congress, contains, besides the usual recommendations for legislation by congress and a detailed history of the causes and events of the late panic, a strong plea for the establishment of a national central bank of issue and reserve, with such alterations in the currency system of the government as shall bring about a greater elasticity in the issuance and retirement of bank notes. It is pointed out by Mr. Ridgely that the present reserve system has the serious fault that in times of emergency the funds deposited in the reserve and central reserve cities are not always available for the very purpose for which they were designed.

In the plan of the comptroller the central bank should have government control as an essential feature, and the great bulk of the shares owned by the national banks, which would be allowed to subscribe for them in fixed proportion to their capital. The profits of the undertaking would go to the government after a certain sum had been set aside for surplus. Directors of this plan would be chosen in the proportion of two-thirds by the stockholders and one-third by the government.

The bank would not be allowed to do a general or commercial business, but would be confined to the transacting of government business, the issue of credit notes, receiving reserve deposits from other banks, the discount of their paper on approved security, or redeeming notes of their customers for other banks. It would have such authority for enabling it to acquire currency as would enable it to import gold and bullion when needed for its reserves.

HIS POOR SMILE.
When He Used It, His Wife Showed Its True Value.

"When a man gets married," exclaimed the citizen who could get the medal for laziness in any competition, "he might just as well make up his mind to work like a dog all the rest of his life."

His wife looked at him with an expression of mingled grief and surprise. After a thoughtful pause she said quietly:

"William, I wish you would stop out here on the porch for a minute if you're not too tired to move so far."

He languidly obeyed and as he stood on the threshold inquired:

"What do you want? It's too warm to sit down."

"I don't want you to perform any labor. You said something about having to work like a dog because you got married."

"Yes," he replied resolutely, "I did."

"Well, for once it's my esteemed privilege to agree with you. I want you to rest your eyes on that liver color of yours for a week with the money that ought to have gone long ago for having the roof painted. He's fast asleep, as he has been for the last three hours. There isn't anything that will stir him up except to offer him something to eat, and even if you do that he'll open one eye and see whether he likes it or not before he will take the trouble to come and get it. Once in a great while he will get up enough energy to go hunting, but when he does he hounds if ever gets any results worth speaking of. I wouldn't have made the comparison for anything, William, for with all your shortcomings I like you. But as long as you brought it up yourself I thought it might not do any harm to call your attention to the fact that all that liver color better does is to take naps and be waited on."

—Detroit Free Press.

A Ready Explanation.
A Washington man one day went out of town for a day's fishing, taking a hunk of bread with him. When he reached the stream where he intended to enjoy his sport he discovered that he had dropped his luncheon somewhere on the way. He hastened back to look for it. Presently he met a burly dandy, who seemed very well pleased with himself and who was in the act of brushing crumbs from his lips with his sleeve.

"Did you pick up anything in the road as you came along?" asked the Washingtonian, with a suspicious glance at the negro.

"No, sah," promptly returned the colored man. "I didn't pick up nothin'. Couldn't a dog have found it an' it up?"—Woman's Home Companion.

Her Mistake.
"Willie," she said, with severity, as she came out of the pantry, "you have been sticking your fingers into that lard can."

"No'm, I haven't either," answered Willie, shaking his head vigorously.

"True enough," she said, after looking at him again; "it was your nose."

As a matter of fact, she was tired to enough to have a good rest, and not realizing at first glance the way he had gone at the pie—Chicago Post.

A Useful Relative.
"Aunt Margaret had five cooks married from her house in three years."

"Is that so? Why don't you send our daughter Julia over and see what Aunt Margaret can do for her?"—Chicago Record-Herald.
